

Sweet potatoes starting to spread out

Checking under the plastic of the sweet spuds, the tubers are forming

Another sowing of eating carrots, buckets in the tunnel

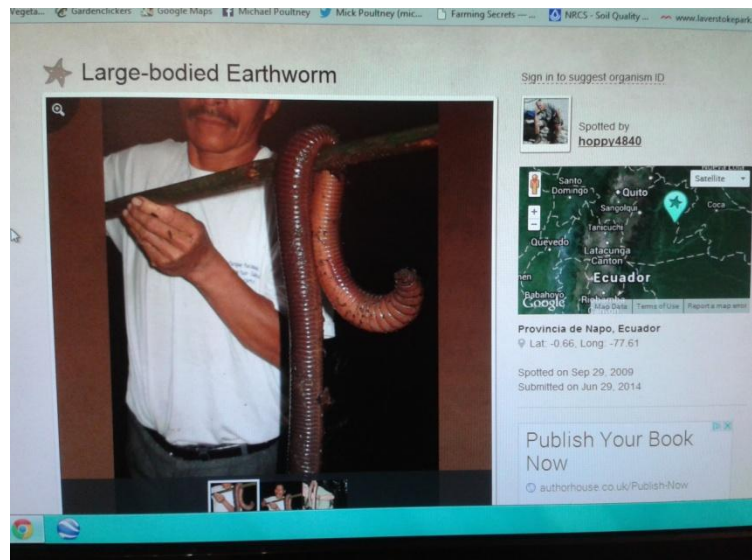

Cue now a third of the way across the greenhouse roof, you should get one cue at each leaf axle

Peas having a legume fix (rhizobium inoculant) before sowing

Lemon drop chillies staked ready for niece and nephew to pick up

Now this is a worm!

My new disabled plot holders getting to grips

Another talk during the week at Wolverhampton Gardening Club - biggest screen I've ever seen!

The second compost tea seminar at Martin Lishman's place at Bourne in Lincs. was fascinating once again

It's black country day today! This is the black country flag flying on my plot. The 3 colours: (black) from furnaces giving out smoke and grime during the day, (red) from the furnaces glowing at night and the central white represents the glass cone, a symbol of the glass making heritage since 1790. The chains showing a typical product manufactured in the area. The black country as an expression dates back to 1840 and got its name from the black soot from the heavy industries that covered the area.
